President's Message

The NSW Health and Medical Research Strategic Review has just been published (http://www.health.nsw.gov.au/pubs/2012/pdf/medical_strategic_review_.pdf). Of course this is most relevant if you are a scientist in NSW and it is gratifying that the State Government has recognized the importance of medical research. (The recent award of the Companion of the Order of Australia AC to Professor Ian Frazer is another very welcome example of our country’s appreciation of the value of medical research.) But the document also has a number of facts that are interesting for all medical and health researchers in Australia. For example, between 1992 and 2005, Australian research delivered a net gain to the Australian economy of $29.5 billion. And for the average dollar invested, there has been a $2.17 gain in health directly from improvements in mortality and morbidity. These are very useful figures for those of us who have to argue the value of medical research with our hospitals and universities who increasingly demand to know the ‘dollar value’ of what we do.

The NSW Strategic Review also provides an excellent template for developing research strategic plans in general. There are two major strategies (1. foster translation and innovation, 2. build globally relevant research capacity) and eleven research themes. Although much of the strategy predictably focuses on administration and infrastructure, there was a significant appreciation of the importance of providing career support, particularly in the early post doctoral period and the need for support for clinical trials. It is an encouraging read, and it is important for ASCEPT to keep abreast with what’s happening at the political level.
